

News Desk Member

NEWS

Click to zoom in

Maritime

Blessing highlights heartbreak of those lost at sea

By Bob Schmitt
 A small boat was seen in the Gulf of Mexico on Monday, Oct. 11, 2010, about 100 miles off the coast of the Florida Panhandle. The boat was carrying a large amount of cargo, including a large amount of fuel. The boat was seen by a Coast Guard cutter, which was on patrol in the area. The cutter was able to board the boat and recover the cargo. The boat was then towed to a port and the cargo was unloaded. The boat was then returned to the Gulf of Mexico. The incident was a reminder of the dangers of maritime travel and the importance of safety.

Small boat seen in the Gulf of Mexico on Monday, Oct. 11, 2010, about 100 miles off the coast of the Florida Panhandle.

Small boat seen in the Gulf of Mexico on Monday, Oct. 11, 2010, about 100 miles off the coast of the Florida Panhandle.

Small boat seen in the Gulf of Mexico on Monday, Oct. 11, 2010, about 100 miles off the coast of the Florida Panhandle.

"It hasn't rained for a long time. It's been months. I guess I really needed it."
 — anonymous

The Bay Bridge
 The Bay Bridge is a suspension bridge that spans the San Francisco Bay. It is one of the longest suspension bridges in the world. The bridge was built in 1937 and has since been expanded and improved. It is a major transportation link for the San Francisco Bay Area.

Small boat seen in the Gulf of Mexico
 A small boat was seen in the Gulf of Mexico on Monday, Oct. 11, 2010, about 100 miles off the coast of the Florida Panhandle. The boat was carrying a large amount of cargo, including a large amount of fuel. The boat was seen by a Coast Guard cutter, which was on patrol in the area. The cutter was able to board the boat and recover the cargo. The boat was then towed to a port and the cargo was unloaded. The boat was then returned to the Gulf of Mexico.

Small boat seen in the Gulf of Mexico
 A small boat was seen in the Gulf of Mexico on Monday, Oct. 11, 2010, about 100 miles off the coast of the Florida Panhandle. The boat was carrying a large amount of cargo, including a large amount of fuel. The boat was seen by a Coast Guard cutter, which was on patrol in the area. The cutter was able to board the boat and recover the cargo. The boat was then towed to a port and the cargo was unloaded. The boat was then returned to the Gulf of Mexico.

Small boat seen in the Gulf of Mexico on Monday, Oct. 11, 2010, about 100 miles off the coast of the Florida Panhandle.